Dear Editor,

A couple of hundred years ago something most wonderful happened; it was our nation's founding. Most would agree that it was divinely inspired. It was the beginning of the first free people to survive as a nation in modern times.

Our Founding Fathers wrote a constitution protecting rights as a self-governed people and safeguarding from the danger of tyrannical government. They sought to build on this constitution, a free enterprise culture that would encourage industry and prosperity; great opportunity for future generations to come. Our Constitution is now the oldest of its kind in existence.

Sadly, our Constitution has been under attack for years by judicial activists, by extreme groups and by those who seek to gain power over us. History should have taught us that government should never be trusted; and we have been too trusting.

We could soon lose our Constitution and Republic; a loss too great to bear. Out of ignorance and apathy we've allowed government to seize much power. We have forgotten our roots and our responsibility to protect this great treasure. Corruption and runaway government now threatens our way of life and for some life itself.

How for example can we trust without our questioning, control of our healthcare to fiscally irresponsible elected officials who have not even read what they are voting on? How can we trust an administration that has demonstrated contempt for life, our constitution and our values? Placing this much trust in Washington is dangerous. And don't be fooled that rationing is not in the bill. When politicians eventually gain control, there will be rationing. This administration is already getting advice as such.

To save our children's future freedom, we must re-learn our roots, our form of government, our responsibilities, teach others and be involved.

I would like to introduce you to a book, "The Five Thousand Year Leap" by Doctor Skousen. It will captivate and amaze you regarding the history and principals on which our government was founded. Most important, it will equip you for today. If you call or write to me I will tell you how to get a copy.
